New low-cost SIN-LGW link

LOW-COST scheduled services are set to debut on the key Singapore-London route, with European carrier Norwegian Air to launch direct flights from London Gatwick to Singapore.

To operate four times per week from 28 Sep, a fifth frequency will be added from 30 Oct and the carrier is offering one way fares from just £180 - not including meals or luggage.

The service will be operated by a new "Norwegian UK" subsidiary based at Gatwick and operating under airline code DI - established so the carrier can access bilateral traffic rights.

Boeing 787-9 aircraft will be used for the service, and the airline said it would also offer flexible premium fares including extra leg room, lounge access, meals and baggage for around £700 one way.

Fares from Singapore to London are priced from SG$199 one way, with premium class from SG$839.

The addition of Norwegian's flights means there will be 50 weekly services between Singapore and London.

The carrier has an extensive short-haul network within Europe and also operates long haul services to Boston, New York and San Francisco in the USA.

Norwegian will be the second low cost long-haul carrier to fly between Singapore and Europe, with Singapore Airlines offshoot Scoot commencing its non-stop services to Athens in Jun and further European destinations flagged to be announced in 2017.

Multi-destination trips up

RESEARCH by Roy Morgan has found an increase in multi-destination holidays by Aussies.

A third of the 2.5 million people who went overseas last year visited several different locations, the report found.

About 85% of these travellers were intent on experiencing the local culture on their trip, while this group was also found to stay away longer (32 days on average) and spend more on accommodation than other travellers ($215pp per night).

Roy Morgan ceo Michele Levine said "the data shows that Aussies travelling to multiple overseas destinations are especially committed to wringing every last drop out of the experience."

Among single-destination travellers, the majority were away for only six nights.

Single location travellers spent an average of $160pp per night.

Window Seat

EVER lied to your partner and tried to get yourself out of a sticky situation?

One Indian travel agent took it to the extreme after e-mailing the Mumbai police about possible hijack attempts at the Mumbai, Hyderabad and Chennai airports.

The man claimed he sent the email after promising to take his girlfriend living in Chennai on a trip to Mumbai, but had no money to book the ticket.

He tried desperately to convince her to cancel the trip but she didn't listen.

Unable to convince her, he tried to create a situation so the flights would be cancelled.

The Hyderabad man even created a fake ticket for her.

It always pays to be up-front!

Technology Update

Today's Technology Update
is brought to you by Excite Holidays.

Breaking it Down

You will have heard the classic piece of advice for getting through any major task - break it down into several smaller tasks. The same goes for building a reliable and efficient piece of technology. In the world of travel technology, reliability is everything - system issues can cost thousands of dollars in lost revenue.

At Excite Holidays, we are aware of the importance of reliability for our agents. They rely on our platform to deliver results effectively, and efficiently. To do this, we must always improve our offering, making changes on the fly and ensuring improvements are pushed out to our agents without delay.

The key to all of this is called Microservices Architecture. Don't be scared by the name, because it's a very simple solution - and harks back to that classic piece of advice for any big task. Our backend system isn't a big lumbering beast, but a set of smaller systems that communicate in the same language. Because of this, we can make several adjustments more frequently, and without taking the system offline. It's a big reason why we can constantly push innovation and still offer a reliable and fast service to our agents. So always remember, even in this complex and busy world of travel technology, the biggest tasks are always achieved by breaking things down.

Damian Sutton, Chief technology officer, Excite Holidays
